Abrams Fensterman Partner Rachel Demarest Gold, Director of the Firm's Employment & Labor Law Practice Group, was featured in amNY for her expert analysis of how the 2025 election results intersect with rapidly shifting workplace laws and protections.

In her column, "Recent Elections and the Workplace," Rachel examines how recent election outcomes and federal policy shifts are reshaping workplace protections and enforcement nationwide. She highlights the growing role of state-level action—particularly in New York—in preserving labor standards amid regulatory uncertainty. The column underscores the importance for employers and employees alike to remain informed as labor laws and enforcement priorities continue to evolve.

Her column underscores a critical truth: politics directly impacts the workplace, and employers and employees alike must stay informed as labor policy continues to shift.

"Politics is the people — and the people work for a living. These policies affect us all, and everyone — employers and employees — have to pay attention." – Rachel Demarest Gold
