In an OpEd for the Long Island Press, Howard Fensterman, Founding Partner of Abrams Fensterman LLP, discusses the recent electoral setbacks experienced by the Democratic Party in New York State, particularly on Long Island. Fensterman highlights that despite national successes attributed to anti-Trump sentiments and abortion rights concerns, Democrats are losing ground in New York due to local issues like crime and the migrant crisis, as well as the perception of an extremist faction within the party. Fensterman concludes by calling for moderates to assert themselves and restore balance to local and state politics, emphasizing the need for a more centrist approach to appeal to the suburban electorate.
